

It is another day in Calimero and friends' hometown, and in Wario-Ware-Man and siblings' flat life is going on as usual; Warrio and VARIO are playing SSB for Wii U on, well, their Wii U console, Warrio's parrot is sleeping upside down on the peg inside the cage, and Wario-Ware-Man is reading the paper.

"Hah, take THAT Warrio!" said VARIO as he seems to have gotten the better of Warrio.

"Not until I take you out with my Wario-Bike!" said Warrio.

While Warrio and VARIO are gaming they hear a slight clinking sound. VARIO looks at the parrot's cage and sees that it has fallen down from the peg yet again, upside down, still sleeping.

"Warrio, your parrot has fallen down from the peg again." said VARIO.

"Sigh. Sometimes I wonder whether we should tie its feet onto the peg from now on to prevent it from just falling down like that..." said Warrio and goes to put the parrot back on the peg.

Over to Wario-Ware-Man on the couch, while reading the paper he sees a article that catches his attention.

"Fatso de Pon?!" Wario-Ware-Man said it out loud. Hearing him say this, Warrio and VARIO abandon their game and heads over to Wario-Ware-Man.

"What is it about Wario-Ware-Man?" asked Warrio.

"I just came across a article mentioning a game named "Fatso de Pon".

" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Fatso de Pon?? Can't remember any game with a name like that..." said Warrio.

"Same here." said VARIO.

"I haven't finished reading the article yet... "The game was planned to be released by a certain video game developer, but was cancelled at the very last minute. The game's cancellation was due to a request made by some fatso in a biker outfit and yellow helmet..." Wario-Ware-Man read it out.

"I wonder who this "fatso" could have been. He sounds relatively familiar in a way..." said Warrio.

"It was actually I who told the company responsible for making the game to cancel it because we didn't want to start banking in on its success." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Well... I still can't quite make any sense of it... and by that I mean your claim about cancelling a game none of us remembers anything about." said Warrio.

"Hang on, I now remember a little bit about this "Fatso de Pon" thing; We were having our own physical real-life version of Panel de Pon, until that video game thing and a certain puzzle fairy put a stop to it. That's as far as I can remember though..." said VARIO.

"Well, it was certainly a bit of fun... but I'd rather not talk about it any further." said Wario-Ware-Man and flips to another page.

"Hm... "MonaWare Inc is no longer producing any games, let alone even being in business. In fact, the main CEO of the company, Mona, hasn't been seen since years ago. Where is she now, and will there be any more games in the MonaWare series?"..." Wario-Ware-Man read the page.

"Naw, all this talk about MonaWare Inc is no longer anywhere interesting to us." said Warrio.

"Agreed. Let's just read another page." said Wario-Ware-Man and simply flips to another page.

"What?? ... "A trio of fatsos and a big, female bee in a blue skirt have gone missing from Dumb-Isle. The houses which they lived in has been standing empty for a very long time. One can only wonder where they have gone off to."..." Wario-Ware-Man read the page, and within the page are a couple photos of the properties where they once lived, with the houses still being empty.

"I didn't know our old house still stands to this very day!" said VARIO in amazement.

"Yeah. I know we took most of our stuff with us, but who knows what else might still be there." said Warrio with wonder. Wario-Ware-Man suddenly snaps his fingers as if he's remembered something.

"Of course!" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"What? Have you got a new idea of yours?" asked Warrio.

"And if so, what idea is it?" said VARIO.

"Actually, I promised that one day we would return to Dumb-Isle to have a look around, the main thing being to go to the Wario & co Media building and bring back anything we can find to our new place." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"I'm worried about leaving the parrot at home though. What if he isn't given anything to eat?" said Warrio.

"One of our friends can look after it while we're away, so no need to worry." said Wario-Ware-Man.

Later, inside the house of Maya the Bee, Maya is sitting in her living room on a soft pillow on the floor meditating to some calm relaxation music, with a cup of honey tea besides her. While she meditates, Maya reaches her right hand out to grab the tea cup and drink it, and puts it back in its place, all the while keeping her eyes closed. Her meditation is broken when she hears the phone ringing.

"Oh... my phone's ringing? I'm not too angry about it though. My session was about to end in any minute anyway." said Maya and gets up to answer the phone.

"Hi, this is Maya the Bee. Who am I speaking to?" said Maya after answering the phone. On the other end is Wario-Ware-Man.

"Wario-Ware-Man here. Sorry if I'm disturbing you or anything." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Oh no, you didn't disturb me at all. Why are you calling me?" said Maya.

"Oh, alright. Me and my siblings were reading the paper earlier today, and we came across an article talking about our and your disappearance from Dumb-Isle." said Wario.Ware.Man.

"That's interesting to hear, but why would they be talking about us now?" said Maya.

"We're not sure either. Anyway, after reading the article we decided to return to Dumb-Isle again and see what's left of it, mostly because of the Wario & co Media building still standing." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Oh, I see." said Maya.

"Anyway, I thought I'd better ask... would you like to come with us?" asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"Well, I'm ready for a change of pace, so... yeah, I'll go with you guys." said Maya.

"Alright. We'll meet up outside the apartment complex. Me and my brothers have almost finished packing already." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Ok, see you guys there." said Maya.

"Alright, bye bye for now." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Bye." said Maya and puts the phone down.

"So Wario-Ware-Man and his siblings are planning to go back to Dumb-Isle. I better get ready..." said Maya and goes into her bedroom to start packing her backpack.

A while later, Wario-Ware-Man, Warrio, VARIO, and Maya are now standing outside the apartment complex along with Calimero and friends.

"Right guys, this is more of a personal journey, and I don't think any of you guys would want to try and reminisce over things you don't even know of, am I right there?" said Wario-Ware-Man to the Green Team.

"You're more than right there. But I still wonder what Dumb-Isle is though..." said Piero.

"Let's just say it is a island which is very much off-the-map. Meaning it isn't listed ANYWHERE on the map, nor are there any mentions of it." said Warrio.

"Those map makers better update the maps someday if that's the case." said Susie.

"Rightly so. Anyway, good luck on your journey guys!" said Valeriano.

"Do be careful out there, ok?" said Calimero.

"We will, and we'll make sure to not get ourselves into any sort of trouble." said Wario-Ware-Man. As Wario-Ware-Man & siblings, and Maya are about to get up on their bikes, Priscilla suddenly rushes towards them.

"Hey wait for me! I wanna come along too!" said Priscilla.

"No Priscilla, it's best you stay here with us." Calimero told her.

"Of course you can come along, Priscilla. If I remember it right, you've been on that island before, haven't you?" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"I have indeed. But thanks for inviting me along! I'll be right back!" said Priscilla and goes to get her helmet. A moment later they are all ready to go, with Priscilla sitting behind the seat of Maya's bike.

"Alright, is everyone ready?" asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"I'm more than ready." said Warrio.

"Me too." said VARIO.

"I'm ready!" said Maya.

"So am I. Let's hit the road guys!" said Priscilla.

"Alright. Dumb-Isle, here we come!!" said Wario-Ware-Man. After starting their bikes they set out on their journey towards Dumb-Isle.

"It sure is going to be a sight to revisit our old home place!" said Maya.

"Yeah. But I wonder, how are we even going to get there? I mean, Dumb-Isle has always been a rather off-the-map island. The only way to get there would be either via boat or plane." said Warrio.

"I know, but I'm sure that a bridge likely connects from the upper side of Germany to a island somewhere in the bottom right of Sweden. That should get us to Dumb-isle in no time." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Sorry to let you down, but the bridge is only for trains. The only way to get to Dumb-Isle, if not taking the boat or plane, would be via the train." said Priscilla.

"And how do you know that?" asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"Because I took the train when I was traveling to the island years ago, so that's how I know it." said Priscilla.

"Oh yeah, I totally forgot... alright, off to the nearest train station in Germany!" said Wario-Ware-Man and drives along with the others to Germany to find a train station.

Later on, they have now reached Germany and have just parked their bikes outside the train station. They've already got their tickets and are just about to board the train.

"Alright VARIO. Whatever you do, DON'T lose your ticket this time!" said Warrio.

"I won't!" said VARIO and puts the ticket very deep into his pocket and zips it. While the others have already boarded the train, as VARIO is about to board it the train door suddenly shuts in front of him and starts to drive off.

"Hey, come back here!!" said VARIO and starts clinging on to the door, leaving him hanging outside.

"Waah!! Anyone let me in!!" VARIO shouted. Wario-Ware-Man turns back and sees VARIO hanging outside.

"My garlic... time to hit the brakes!" said Wario-Ware-Man and pulls the emergency switch which makes the doors open, but also stopping the train. The train guard asks Wario-Ware-Man why he pulled the switch in the first place.

"The door just shut itself in front of one of my siblings, leaving him just hanging on to the train. I had to pull the emergency switch to let him in!" Wario-Ware-Man explained.

"Alright, we understand. Sorry about it, but we thought there was no one standing outside." said the guard and allows them to find a seat, with the train soon starting again.

On their journey towards Dumb-Isle they all chat over how the next day will turn like.

"So, how do you guys think our day will be on Dumb-Isle?" asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"I think it will be just like any other journey. Maybe some slight feelings over things, and a few sights here and there." said Warrio.

"I'm only curious what's changed since we vanished off the face of that island..." said VARIO.

"I wonder the same as you VARIO." said Maya.

"It has been quite some time since I last visited this island, so I wonder how it'd feel like to me to visit it after so very long." said Priscilla.

"I however, can only think of one thing; the Wario & co Media building..." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Sorry, but what is "Wario & co Media", and what is so special about it?" asked Priscilla.

"It's nothing much special. It is simply the place where me and my siblings were working at along with its then-CEO a loong time ago." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"We were basically producing things like a series about a certain fatso which turned out to be not so focused on him in the end, and the Wario bros & Maya the Bee series which was centered entirely on me, my siblings, and Maya." said Warrio.

"Hm, I remember a little about the last one, but not much apart from me having featured in it. But why is it so important for us to go there?" said Priscilla.

"Well, we will be having a look in there to see if there's anything worth salvaging. I'm sure there'll be loads of materials just left inside the building, waiting to be dug out." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Are we going to have a look around the rest of the island?" asked VARIO.

"We're going to explore other places as well. I'm also a bit interested in seeing what else might have been going on at Dumb-Isle since the day we went off." said Wario-Ware-Man.

A day later the train has just arrived on the train station in Dumb-Isle, and Wario-Ware-Man and friends have now gone to a small café on the station to have some breakfast. Warrio and VARIO are having some garlic sandwiches, Maya is having a bowl of vegetables, Wario-Ware-Man is just having a glass of water, and Priscilla is tugging in on a fancy sandwich.

"Very tasty sandwiches we got here, right VARIO?" said Warrio.

"Yep. The garlic is very crispy and fried. Pretty much how we're doing it at home!" said VARIO.

"You haven't got yourself anything to eat Wario-Ware-Man." said Maya.

"Naa, I just don't feel like eating anything. I did order a glass of water though, which I think should be enough for me." said Wario-Ware-Man and sips on his water.

"You know, while the train station looks mostly the same since we left the island, everything else seems pretty different!" said VARIO.

"I don't mind it for now. The garlic sandwiches are still of the same great quality as always!" said Warrio. Wario-Ware-Man just sighs at Warrio's comment.

"I can only think over how it would be like for us to revisit all the locales me and my siblings have been to earlier." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Aw, I'm sure it'll be like old times Wario-Ware-Man. While things may have changed on the outside, I think most of the old locales will be just how they were." said Maya.

"I'm not feeling so sure..." said Wario-Ware-Man, but decides not to worry and keeps drinking his water.

After they're done at the café they leave the train station behind and are now having a wander around on the island.

"I can't believe that the guard at the door wouldn't let me leave despite showing him the ticket!" said VARIO in bewilderment.

"Me thinks the guard probably remembered an old event when he saw you again, and decided to get his own back by not letting you leave the train station." said Warrio.

"But WHY?? I hadn't even done anything to him!" said VARIO.

"Well, whatever the reason, I sure had to coax the guard to let VARIO pass. I'm sure you wouldn't ever do such a thing again, right VARIO?" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"I certainly wouldn't!... though I can't remember exactly what I did." said VARIO while shrugging.

While they're looking around the island, our friends(meaning Wario-Ware-Man, Warrio, and VARIO) are quite shocked, and disappointed that not much remains of Dumb-Isle's old incarnation anymore. Almost everything has been completely transformed; the city is looking much different, with shops and so on bearing the names of "Dumb-Crow" and "Woodster", or something to that extent.

"Hey, since when did the signs of these shops say "Dumb-Crow" and "Woodster" on them?!" said Warrio in shock.

"It is like I suspected; Dumb-Isle has been transformed into a place where only Dumb-Crows and Woodsters live!" said VARIO in fright.

"I agree. But even if we like it or not, change has now come about it seems." said Wario-Ware-Man.

They head into the shopping centre, and boy has things changed in there since they last were around.

"Hang on, what happened to "Garlic Paradise"?!" said Warrio in astonishment.

"I second your surprise. Garlic Paradise was where they always had the best garlies to buy in all shapes and forms, now it's just some average food store named "Dumb-Crow's Food Paradise"!" said VARIO.

"And even our favorite grocery store, "Konsum", has been renamed to "Dumb-Crow's Groceries"!" said Warrio.

"Well, I told you that change had come about. Let's head into the first store and see what's different." said Wario-Ware-Man and heads into "Dumb-Crow's Food Paradise" with the others following. Indeed, the food seems to now be stocked with all kinds of tasty food and items.

"Wow, talk about really branching out!" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"While I have to admit it is INDEED an improvement, it's still not the Garlic Paradise I used to know. I can barely see where the garlic is!" said Warrio.

"I can spot some garlic here and there." said VARIO while looking around.

"You do? WHERE?!" said Warrio.

"It isn't much, but what little garlic is left are just bags in a corner, and plastic bags of garlic gloves in a fridge box." said VARIO.

"Yuck!!" said Warrio.

"Indeed..." said VARIO.

"Alright, we've seen enough. Let's head out guys!" said Warrio and heads out with VARIO.

"Sigh... alright guys, we're heading out now. I think we've seen all there is to in here... Maya? Priscilla?" said Wario-Ware-Man and notices that Priscilla and Maya have gone missing. He then sees them coming on his way out of the store.

"Sorry for just vanishing off, I just wanted to buy myself some jars with honey." said Maya.

"And I wanted to have myself an ice cream!" said Priscilla while eating on her ice cream.

"With the ice cream bearing the shape of a Dumb-Crow, I guess?" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Te hee. Nope." said Priscilla and walks away. Wario-Ware-Man can't help but notice Priscilla's ice cream is in the form of a certain kitty head.

"Now that's something I don't see everyday..." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"So... what about Dumb-Crow's Groceries?" asked VARIO.

"I expect it to be exactly identical, apart from the branding." said Warrio.

"I agree. I think we've seen everything in here now." said Wario-Ware-Man and heads out of the shopping centre with the others. Outside the shopping centre they are now ready to go, but notice that Priscilla's gone missing.

"Hang on, wasn't Priscilla with us a moment ago??" said Warrio.

"She sure were. Let's just wait here for a moment and see if she turns up." said Wario-Ware-Man.

They wait for a little while. A moment or so later they see Priscilla heading out of the shopping centre with a Hello Kitty plushie in her hands.

"Sorry for just running off, but I thought I better get myself something nice." said Priscilla.

"We understand." said Maya.

Warrio meanwhile is dumbfounded over Priscilla's newly bought thing and is about to make a comment.

"No Warrio, you don't!" said VARIO and puts his hand over VARIO's mouth.

"But why?? I'm just trying to say my opinion!" said Warrio in a muffled voice.

"I know, but you better NOT ruin her moment now." said VARIO.

"What are you talking about?" said Priscilla.

"Oh, nothing. Let's just get a move on now, ok." said VARIO.

They leave the shopping centre behind. A while later their next stop is in front of a large building with a Wario-Bike motif at the top of the entrance door.

"Hey, this is the Wario-Bike Industries, where the best Wario-Bikes are made!" said Warrio.

"I can't believe this place is still standing here today! In fact, the guy who owns this place, Wario-Man, still appears to be overseeing production, from what I can see." said Wario-Ware-Man while looking at Wario-Man standing next to a Wario-Bike just outside. Wario-Man takes notice of them and heads over to greet them.

"Well hello there Wario-Ware-Man and your brothers! Never would I expect to see you guys here again!" said Wario-Man.

"How come the Wario-Bike Industries is still active to this very day??" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Well, I just couldn't let my beloved company fall apart due to the Dumb-Crows and Woodsters' influence on this island. I'm determined to still produce the best Wario-Bikes in the world, and not even a change in population shall change that." said Wario-Man.

"Are you still wearing the payamas-like clothes of a certain fatso's alter ego?" Warrio asked him, having taken notice of Wario-Man's new outfit as of recently. Wario-Man doesn't know how to answer his question though.

"Um... anyway, whadd'ya say about a little tour inside the building??" said Wario-Man.

"Sure thing!" said Wario-Ware-Man and follows Wario-Man inside the building along with the other guys.

Inside the building, they see every single Wario-Bike ever produced being worked on. To VARIO however, the insides of the building seem rather different compared to how he remembers it.

"Things are looking very different in here!" said VARIO.

"What do you mean?" asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"I mean, that when I last visited this building to get my bike fixed there wasn't any corners with games and sports. When you came in there was only a teeny little room where you waited while Wario-Man gone into another room where a bike was being worked on. At least from what I can remember." said VARIO.

"VARIO is right. The insides used to look very different years earlier. Instead of there just being a little waiting room, the insides have been expanded to include various other things." said Wario-Man.

"But how come?" asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"Well, I learned from my early days that to make a Wario-Bike of the best quality means taking the time with them, and not rushing my employees and workers too hard. That's why there are now corners here and there where games and sporting activities can be had, cafés, resting places, spas and all the like, so everyone can have some time off whenever needed." said Wario-Man.

"Now that's definitely a change I didn't know about!" said Warrio.

"I wonder how working at this place used to be earlier." said Maya.

"Not too good I admit; I was pushing my employees and workers quite hard, if a little too much sometimes. It even got to the point where several employees experienced burnout and exhaustion from too much work and stress..." said Wario-Man.

"But isn't that what makes a Wario-Bike great?" said Warrio, totally misunderstanding everything.

"That's what I believed at first... anyway, while all this was going on I was also on the near brink of being completely exhausted from all the shouting and such I did, which was probably the result of stressing too much over the effort required to get each and every Wario-Bike done on time..." said Wario-Man.

"And what happened then as a result of all that?" asked VARIO.

"Well, one day a strange thing happened; when I sat down in my chair to drink my cup of coffee, I just sat and stared at the wall in front of me. It felt like my mind went blank for a moment. I didn't even drink on my coffee..." said Wario-Man.

"But surely it didn't just end there, did it?" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"You're right there. Anyway, while I was in this state I began thinking over all the times I've been shouting and pointing at the workers to get the Wario-Bikes done in a timely manner, the protests going on outside the company by former employees over the working conditions, and now it was my turn to start experiencing burnout from too much shouting and stress..." said Wario-Man.

"So what did you do to turn things around?" asked Maya.

"I came to the realization that if things didn't change soon, the company would be facing forced closure. I started changing my behavior towards myself and my employees. I started looking for advice on how to treat my employees better. Using all the money we made from selling Wario-Bikes, I had the insides of the company rebuilt with various facilities to relax in and such, and taking suggestions on what kinds of things to include." said Wario-Man.

"And what did all those changes result in? Did things turn around?" said Warrio.

"Things did turn around. As a result of all these changes things within the company started getting better; these days I rarely if ever shout on my employees anymore, and I'm now treating them a lot better. My employees enjoy working at the company now that breaks can be had, and there is not too much rushing about. I'm also being much nicer towards myself these days." said Wario-Man.

"But surely some sort of stress must still occur from time to time?" asked VARIO.

"Well, sometimes the employees DO have to work a bit quicker than usual, but only when things gets urgent. Other than that though, I always make sure to not have them work too hard, and I always treat them with respect." said Wario-Man.

"Well, I have to point out that the atmosphere within this company is a lot nicer compared to others!" said Priscilla, with the others agreeing with her.

Wario-Man then shows them the newest Wario-Bike they're currently working on; a sporty Wario-Bike with a Wario-Nose motif on it, and with funky black glasses on front. Warrio and VARIO's eyes opens wide at the sight.

"Now THAT'S a Wario-Bike of the highest quality, AND style too!!" said Warrio.

"How come we can't even have a Wario-Bike like that?!!" said VARIO.

"It will be out eventually. While the design of the bike is very much finalized, there's still some testing to be done before it can get out to market." said Wario-Man.

"We understand. Producing a Wario-Bike of such quality certainly takes time, and selling it in a rushed state would NOT be a good move." said Wario-Ware-Man.

After having visited Wario-Bike Industries it is time for our friends to press on. They're now heading towards the houses where Wario-Ware-Man, Warrio, VARIO, and Maya used to live in.

"I wonder how our house has fared since we left the island..." said VARIO.

"I think it has stayed exactly the same, though it could well be empty now." said Warrio.

"I'm not as optimistic though. I may be proven wrong, but I believe that some nasty outsider may well have taken refuge in it by now." said Wario-Ware-Man. The thought about Wario-Ware-Man's theory makes both Warrio and VARIO shiver, the latter even more so.

When they finally arrive at their old place of living they are relieved to see their houses still standing. Well, mostly Warrio and VARIO.

"Here it is guys; our old houses which we lived in for a veery long time!" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"It is very odd to see my own house being left the way it was before we moved out. I can even see the flower shed and the old water pool in the backyard of my house!" said Maya after observing her property being exactly the same like older times.

"And so is our house the same as well... apart from the overgrown lawn, that is." said Warrio.

"I can even see the hammocks we used to lie on during the summers, along with the little outdoor tables!" said VARIO.

"So we didn't even bring our hammocks with us?? My garlic, we sure were in a REAL hurry to get away from this place..." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"We were indeed. I wonder what's still in there, if anything..." said Warrio.

They head inside Wario-Ware-Man and siblings' house first. Inside their old home things are rather dark and dusty. The rooms have never been touched in a very long time, with most furnitures still in there.

"My garlic, almost everything is still in here! Very dusty and full with cobwebs though." said Wario-Ware-Man as he begins to sneeze due to all the dust, with the others doing the same. In the living room the sofa, table, and TV still stands in their place.

"Heck, even the living room is the same as it were!" said Warrio.

"And there's even that old CRT TV of ours!" said VARIO.

"Aw mother of garlic, no. Now that he's seeing that old TV again, I suspect VARIO's going to fall back into his old habit of referring to old TVs as "Digital TVs"..." said Warrio with dread.

"For once you're actually wrong. I'm not feeling very much for this old thing anymore. In fact, I don't think I ever wanna own such a old TV again..." said VARIO with a tone of detachment in his voice.

"Really?? ... phew. It seems that VARIO's way of thinking is FINALLY moving a bit forwards in time." said Warrio in relief.

"Still wonder if it'll turn on though..." said VARIO and tries to turn the TV on to see what happens. It won't turn on though.

"Completely dead..." said VARIO.

"Yeah. The electricity in the house has long since gone off. I don't think any other electronics still left in the house would be working either." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"There's still our old Wii console to the left of the TV though." said VARIO.

"What? We just left that thing behind us?? ah well, might as well take it with us. I don't think anyone would be bothered by us looting in our own house..." said Warrio and has VARIO take the Wii console with them.

They then head into the kitchen, and even in there most things are still intact like the fridge, the cooking place, along with the kitchen table and chairs.

"My garlic, it almost feels like visiting a place from bygone times..." said Warrio.

"It sure does. Even I can't believe that almost everything is still in here... with the exception of things being covered in dust and cobwebs over the years though, which I said earlier." said Wario-Ware-Man.

The first thing Warrio does is open the fridge, only to see a single garlic in there that has gone so bad it has started to take the shape of a gray, nasty looking Wario-Nose.

"AIEE!!!" VARIO jumped in terror after seeing the extrememly bad and rotten garlic in the fridge.

"Nope. Nothing of interest in here..." said Warrio and closes the fridge again. They look into the pantry next, but it is all empty so they just move on.

Next they head up to their old bedroom. The double bed Wario-Ware-Man, Warrio, and VARIO shared is also there, complete with drawer. Their clothes aren't in there anymore though, nor are the alarm clock on the bed table.

"Wow, our old bed's still in here too!" said Warrio.

"In a way, although it's daylight outside, it still feels kind of spooky in here..." said Priscilla.

"I agree. I used to visit this house back in the day, but I don't think I've ever been in their bedroom before..." said Maya.

"And on top of the drawer here also stands a few photos of me and my siblings! But I thought we took those with us when we moved!?" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"We obviously didn't. But do you think we should even take them with us now?" said VARIO.

"I don't see why not. While it is a general rule to always leave things in a old and abandoned house untouched, I don't think anyone cares if only a few things go missing. Besides, nobody's going to move into this house anyway, it seems." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"I'm going to the bathroom guys." said Warrio.

"You do that. We'll remain outside because... we don't wanna see you doing that thing!" said VARIO.

"Come on guys, I'm not gonna go to the toilet! I'm just gonna have a little look around." said Warrio and enters the bathroom, closing the door behind him.

"My garlic. We just took whatever things we needed with us and left everything else in the house untouched, because there's still a stack of rolls by the toilet..." said Warrio.

Warrio tries to turn on the shower, expecting it not to work. To his surprise the shower still works and a jet of freezing cold water shoots out at him. Outside the bathroom a lot of screaming and such can be heard. Warrio then comes out wiping himself dry with a towel.

"Warrio, what in the garlic happened in there? Why are you wet??" said VARIO.

"I just took myself a little shower, nothing more..." said Warrio, refusing to talk much more about it.

"So the shower still works?" asked Maya.

"Apparently it does." said Warrio.

"Did you turn it off before leaving the bathroom?" asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"I did. I always turn off any tap or shower before leaving any bathroom, why wouldn't I??" said Warrio.

"No reason. Was just wondering..." said Wario-Ware-Man.

Before they head out they have one last look in the cellar where they stored all the old junk. It's looking rather empty in there though.

"Well that's very disappointing!" said Warrio.

"Yeah. Not very much remains in here, apart from some old boxes we somehow forgot to bring with us." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"I can already see Warrio and VARIO checking in on the contents of those boxes." said Maya.

"Let them do it. We're not in a hurry right now... apart from that one other thing, that is." said Wario-Ware-Man and looks at his wristwatch.

"Oh yes, the Wario & co Media building. Don't worry Wario-Ware-Man, we'll get there soon." said Maya.

"Hm, in one of these boxes is... a sign pointing upwards?? Wario-Ware-Man, do you know anything about this thing?" Warrio asked him.

"Ah, that one... well, it is one of the signs I put up on the tall mountain pillar my old WarioWare Inc. company used to be, to tell visitors where the building was." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"And in a corner here stands a strange-looking washing machine..." said Warrio.

"Hang on, that is, or was Dr. Crygor's Gravitator machine which we converted from making button-less GBA consoles with tilt sensors to making copies of video games!" said VARIO.

"Ah yes, the old Gravitator machine... can't remember if we gave it a different name after we converted the thing to make multiple copies of video games." said Wario-Ware-Man. Warrio roots some more in one of the boxes and finds a pair of shoes with forks strapped under them.

"Shoes with forks under them?? Hm... ah, now I remember; I used these shoes while I was trying to impress on Maya's childhood sister, Cinderella! Even so, that attempt failed quite miserably..." said Warrio. Maya just chuckles after hearing him reminisce a little over his attempt to impress on her sister.

Not feeling amused over it, Warrio is about to put the shoes back in the box when a stack of photos falls out from the bottom of the box.

"What was those things that just fell out??" said Warrio as VARIO picks up the photos.

"Hm, from what I can see these are photos of... the Wario World Pictures Inc. building from its heyday!? I thought they were long gone!" said VARIO.

"What have you guys got there?" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"These are photos of the old Wario World Pictures Inc. building that somehow went missing before we moved out!" said VARIO and hands the photos over to Wario-Ware-Man.

On the photos are various shots of the exterior of the building from all sides and angles. On the next bunch of photos are shots of Wario-Ware-Man and co working away at the company, having fun playing on the Nintendo Wii, and sometimes even living and sleeping inside the building.

"I can't really believe what I'm just seeing... I always assumed that these photos were lost forever!" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"We were probably so busy trying to bring the things we could take with us, and it just didn't occur to us to thoroughly check the boxes in the cellar." said Warrio.

"We better bring these boxes with us so I can sort through them at my own pace." said Wario-Ware-Man and tells Warrio and VARIO to take the remaining boxes with them as they head out of the building.

After having checked the first house, they are now thinking of checking out Maya's house.

"Do you guys think we should have a look around in Maya's old house?" asked Warrio.

"I don't think it'd be worth the bother. I believe I took everything in there with me when we were moving out, so the insides might as well be empty." said Maya.

"Well, that answers the question I suppose... onward to the other place!" said Warrio.

With Maya's house being presumed completely empty, they move on to their last destination. They then arrive at the place where two buildings stands; Wario & co Media and Wario World Pictures Inc. The latter has now fallen into even more decay, now just being a big ruin.

"Sniff... I can't believe this is all what now exist of WWP Inc..." said VARIO as he sheds a few tears.

"I know, but the time would have come sooner or later anyway. Wario World Pictures Inc. are just a memory in our minds now, kept alive by the new photos we just found in our old cellar." said Warrio.

They head inside the Wario & co Media building, and the insides are just as it were when they last visited it, which was yeears ago.

"Wow, I've never been in here before... and look at all the junk lying around." said Priscilla.

"I've been in here before, and it feels just as weird to come back again after so very long..." said Maya.

"Ok guys, we don't have much time to wander around in here because the building is set to be demolished the next day!" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"And HOW do you know that?" asked Warrio.

"Because I saw a sign outside which says the building's going to be demolished." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"A whole day huh?? Hah, that's going to be PLENTY of time for us!" said Warrio.

"Even though the building is set to be knocked down the next day, we have got to be on the train back home in 4 hours." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"Oh. So we still haven't got much time..." said Warrio.

"Exactly." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"So because our time is so short, what things needs to be salvaged?" Maya asked Wario-Ware-Man.

"We obviously can't take EVERYTHING with us, so anything of great importance like film reels, tapes, documents and such, ought to be saved." said Wario-Ware-Man.

After it has all been decided our friends set to work. While looking around for things of great importance to preserve VARIO makes an extraordinary discovery.

"A pair of computers, and four 500 Gigabyte external harddrives?? Guess there must be LOADS of data on them... Warrio!!" VARIO called out.

"Alright, what is it?!" said Warrio, carrying with him a stack of folders containing papers and documents.

"I found this lot here!" said VARIO and points to the computers and external harddrives.

"WOW, now that's bound to be a goldmine!! Not in money of course, but when it comes to important data like assets, files, and such!" said Warrio.

Warrio and VARIO alerts the other guys to their discovery, and they ponder over what to do with it all.

"Well, it sure is an awesome discovery and all, but... should we really bring these things with us??" said Wario-Ware-Man.

"We may not be able to take the computers with us, but at least the external harddrives could be saved?" said Warrio.

"I agree with that. We can take the harddrives with us. The computers will have to be left in here. Besides, they would more or less no longer boot up now considering their age, and for however long they may have been switched off..." said Wario-Ware-Man.

After having gotten the most important things from the building they all stand outside in front of it.

"I have to admit that even though I haven't worked in there, in one way or another it almost feels like I've been here before." said Maya.

"Wario & co Media had a good start, but it was plagued by various circumstances like debts and so on, and it just couldn't sustain itself in the long run..." said Warrio.

"sniff. Goodbye Wario & co Media. May you forever be remembered as the place where we at least tried to work on more serious productions..." said VARIO while shedding tears as he waves the building goodbye, with Priscilla looking at him in wonder and confusion.

"Well, all these things we have seen today, is indicative to us that our times on this island have long come and gone. It's no use standing around here to keep mourning over a building which is about to be destroyed." said Wario-Ware-Man, with everyone but VARIO agreeing.

"A building?? These were MORE than just buildings, especially the first one! Wario World Pictures Inc. almost felt like a secondary home to me in a way!" said VARIO defensively.

"VARIO, do try and put these feelings of yours aside. What has come has already gone. We will never get it back or be able to re-experience it again! Our lives have to go on even if we're losing another part of it. I'm sorry, but that's just the way things are..." said Warrio.

"... Alright, maybe I'll just drop it all from now on. Like you just said, life must go on..." said VARIO.

A while later, our friends are now at the train station and are about to board the train. The guard who didn't let VARIO leave the train station earlier stops him again.

"Halt! You're not allowed in!" said the Dumb-Crow guard.

"Come on, I've already showed you the ticket! Just leave me alone!" said VARIO.

"Nope. Not until I show you MY ticket!" said the guard and shows VARIO his fist. Warrio just sighs and goes to the guard and VARIO.

"Hey guard. I just saw a Woodster nearby calling you foul names behind your back!" said Warrio, attempting to trick the guard.

"You're sure??" asked the guard.

"Absolutely. He even looks guilty, judging by that ignorant pumpkin face of his." said Warrio.

"Right, I'll teach him something... hey you, Woodster log! Who are you calling bad names behind my back, huh?!" said a now enraged guard and goes to the unsuspecting and innocent Woodster to tell him off.

"Come on VARIO, let's get on the train quick before the guard comes back!" said Warrio.

"Alright, coming!" said VARIO and sneaks away with Warrio to the train.

With them all now on the train, our friends sit down to reflect on the day that has just been.

"I'm still unable to believe that so much has changed since we last were on this island..." said VARIO.

"I'm very disappointed to see that both Garlic Paradise and Konsum no longer exist." said Warrio.

"And I'm surprised to know that Wario-Bike Industries is STILL up and running! By this point one would have thought it to be long gone..." said Wario-Ware-Man.

"I however, am very surprised to find that our old houses are standing even now, still in the state they were in after we left." said Maya.

Priscilla meanwhile remains silent, and is feeling more than content with her trip so far, if her glance at the Hello Kitty plushie in her lap are anything to go by.

"Well, it sure has been a long day today. Having raided the Wario & co Media building now, what hidden treasures will we find on all those tapes and film reels? As for the external harddrives, what things would they contain? Should be very interesting to have a look at it all when we get back home..." said Wario-Ware-Man. His thoughts keep spinning in his mind while the others are talking away on the train which is now heading towards the station in Germany.

The End...